The screenshot shows the 'Intended use' step of the Twitter API application review process. The page has a purple header with navigation links: Developer, Use cases, Products, Docs, More, Labs, Apply, and Apps. Below the header, the title 'Get access to the Twitter API' is followed by a breadcrumb trail: Twitter @username > Organization > Intended use > Review > Terms. The main content area is divided into two columns. The left column, with a purple background, contains a yellow notepad icon and the heading 'Key things to keep in mind'. It explains that the application helps ensure compliance with Twitter's Developer Policies and mentions the review process. The right column has a white background and the heading 'How will you use the Twitter API or Twitter data?'. It includes a note: 'All fields are required unless marked optional'. Below this is a section titled 'In your words' with a text area for describing the intended use. A sample text is visible: 'We are integrating our post composer tool with Twitter to...'. At the bottom right of the text area is a small icon of a person.

The screenshot shows the 'Review' step of the Twitter API application review process. The page has the same purple header and breadcrumb trail as the previous step: Twitter @username > Organization > Intended use > Review > Terms. The left column, with a purple background, features a green checkmark icon and the heading 'Check your information'. It asks the user to ensure details are correct and mentions that the email will be used for important information. The right column has a white background and the heading 'Is everything correct?'. It displays a summary of the application details in a table-like format:

Primary use	Build customized solutions in-house
Account type	Organization
Twitter username	[Redacted]
Email	[Redacted]

 At the bottom right of the page, there are two buttons: 'Back' and 'Looks good!'.
